

GRAY MALIN

Gray Malin brings the art of photography to life by capturing a moment that inspires wonderment. His search for beauty has taken him all over the world from Antarctica to the salt flats in Bolivia. Gray's worldly travels all ignite the adventure of a journey beginning with a final destination in mind: one's walls.

Gray had an affinity for photography as a child, but it was not until he won the Dallas Museum of Art Young Masters Showcase that he decided to pursue his talent. A Dallas Native, Gray attended school in Boston where he studied photography before moving to Los Angeles to pursue his passion for the art. Once in Los Angeles, Gray rented a small booth at a Sunday swap meet in West Hollywood where he started selling his work. His images became noted in 2009 when he produced the Prada Marfa series, a sequence of photographs he created on a whim with the assistance of the local township in Marfa, Texas. It was the art generated from this shoot that propelled Gray to pursue photography full time.

Gray is most known for bringing the world's most popular beaches into focus from a bird's eye view. He strives to captivate and inspire while traversing the globe. Today, Gray's work can be seen far and wide from J. Crew's flagship store in London to the homes of celebrities along both coasts of the United States. In addition, he has also collaborated with many famous lifestyle brands to cultivate products complementing his many works of art, including Orlebar Brown and Sperry Top-Sider.

Gray's extraordinary success in the field of photography has allowed him to work with renowned names in the industry like David LaChapelle. It has also placed him in leading publications including Elle, Details, House Beautiful and Domino Magazine. Gray and his travel adventures have been noted by Tory Burch and Rebecca Minkoff, while his newly launched series are followed by today's most prestigious lifestyle blogs all over the world.

The photographer and founder of the Gray Malin brand is also a former marketing and communications major who enforces his artistic ideals as the company's Creative Director.
